

RUSSIA ON EVE OF BIG BUSINESS BOOM

Return of Capital To Favor Is Held As Chief Reason

By JOHN COLLINS

Russia is on the eve of an economic advance similar to that of America, in the opinion of many in the financial district. With that country returned to capitalism, despite the title of Communism, or whatever any one chooses to call the present system there, Russia's natural resources are about to be exploited on an immense scale.

According to Alfred O. Corbin of F. J. Lisman & Co., Wall Street bankers, who is an expert on Russia and has just returned from that country, the last opposition to capitalism within the ranks of the Soviet authorities has been removed. So thoroughly capitalistic is Russia now that it is actually about to extend an immense credit to one of the Chinese factions in return for concessions in Manchuria.

"Business with Russia, once restored," says Mr. Corbin, "will develop on a gigantic scale comparable only to the development of the American West. When finally Siberia is opened up, it will prove a land not only rich in mineral resources, but admirable for farming as well."

"Moreover, it is the avowed intention of the Soviet government to enter into a discussion with French holders of Russian bonds for an adjustment. This is a factor of importance which should not be underestimated. It is indicative of a desire on the part of Russia to re-enter the society of civilized nations."

"Never within the past decade have I entertained greater confidence in the rehabilitation of a war-torn world. My chief reason for this optimism may be found in the decided change in the Russian situation which I have always looked upon as constituting the crux of all international problems."

Wall Street Says:

"Sentiment has veered sharply to the railroad group, and with many prominent people and firms advising their purchase."—Reinhart & Bennet.

"While industrials are acting heavy, a switch to the oils for a trading turn or to the rails for the pull appears most profitable."—Josephthal & Co.

"In accordance with our forecast of Friday the oils are in process of another advance."—Jacques Cohen, Baar, Cohen & Co.

seph Faurot and Frederick Drenen, fingerprint experts who examined the garments at police headquarters.

"Prints" Absorbed

Faurot said the fact that all the garments were of closely woven, flexible material made it certain that any prints which might have been there four years ago would have been absorbed by the material since that time.

Underwood declared that the state has proof that two or three additional persons were at the scene of the double murder when it took place and that these persons will be arrested in two or three days.

One "important lead" is being investigated in New York city and another detective is in an up-state town, where he hopes to find the gun with which the murders were committed.

Under the leadership of the rails the market took a decided turn upward after the first few hours today, with the result that several motors and industrials ran up appreciable gains. Chesapeake & Ohio led the rail division with an advance of more than two points. Atchison eased off a trifle under pressure of profit-taking. New York Central ran up a gain of more than a point in the first few hours, but later receded on profit-taking.

General Motors sagged a fraction through the first hour or two, but in the spurt around noon netted nearly a point. Mack Truck followed a similar course, making a gain of more than a point about midday.

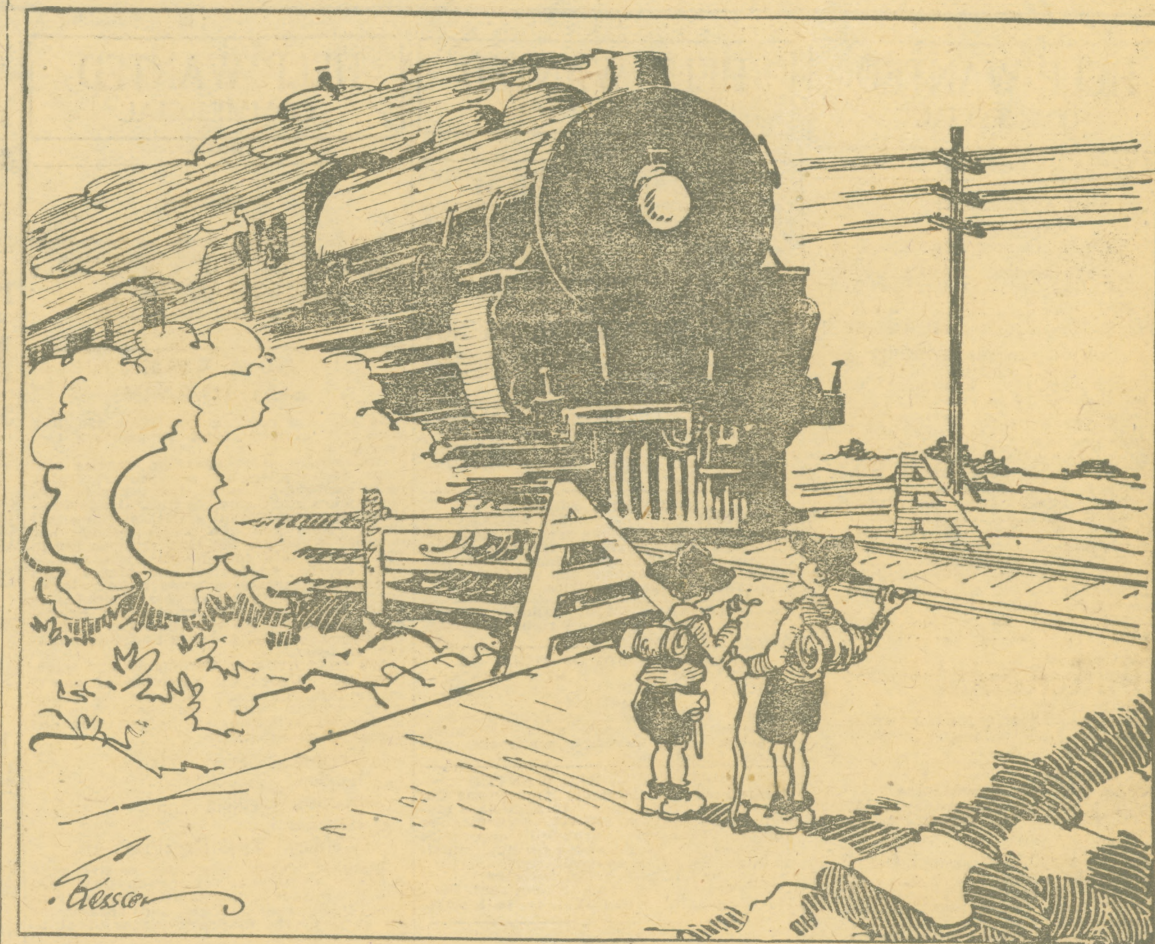

U. S. Steel touched 152, for a gain of more than a point. American Can also advanced more than a point.

Charlotte Mills As a Baby

THE OPTIMISTS--

Charlotte Mills's Story of Murder

ly recall hearing her say one day, in that positive way she had:—

"Well, I'm discouraged and disgusted! If the landlord doesn't make those repairs I simply won't pay the rent, and if there's any fuss we'll move, and that's all there is to it!"

That made an impression on me, baby as I was. I crept downstairs to where the landlady lived. She had always been very nice to me and used to take me in her arms and pet me and love me. When she reached for me this time I pulled away, looking as cross as two sticks. She spoke to me and I turned my face from her.

"Why, Baby, whatever's the matter with you? Don't you love me any more, Charlie?"

"No," I snapped, with my nose five inches in the air. "And we're going to move out and stung you a month's rent for not fixing the pipes."

Amazed at "Notions"

She laughed, but she went right upstairs to mother and asked what it was all about—said she didn't want us to move, and where did that child get the notion things weren't going to be fixed and anybody was going to be "stung" for rent?

It ended in a friendly talk and she promised to repair the pipes. Mother said afterward:—

"You were a naughty baby, all right—but I guess if it hadn't been for you we never would have got the pipes fixed."

So I thought I was pretty smart. I guess it was over a year after that when we came to the Carman Street house, where we still live. After a little while my brother was born.

I was four then. I used to run in to see the people next door—awfully kind people. I always called them Aunt Mil and Uncle Gus because I heard the folks in the downstairs part of our house call them that; they were relatives of theirs and very nice, too, things. She relates the advice her and made a great pet of me, so of course I loved them. They were Aunt Mil's nieces and nephews. The girls used to save me candies and pieces of cake, and their boy friends would bring me little presents. I remember a ring and a necklace and bracelet. Oh, how I loved and treasured them.

Disliked Jewelry

Mother never had any jewelry, but I often heard her say she didn't care for it—it "didn't suit her." She always wore the plainest things. Always tailored suits that she made herself; and plain velour hats; and a certain kind of oxford ties with broad ribbons in them and low heels.

She had very small feet and sometimes later on, when I was old enough to think about such things, I used to wonder how mother would look in pretty, high-heeled shoes and silk stockings and fluffy clothes. I didn't remember ever in my life seeing her dressed up. Even her summer dresses were straight and plain.

For a while after Dan was born mother was quiet and depressed. Father was crazy about Dan from the first. He was a good baby and mother used to look at him sometimes as if she was thinking hard. Then she'd snatch him up and hug him and make a great fuss. Sometimes I thought she loved him more than she did me, but she said no, it was only that she felt more sad when he was born than when I was, and she wanted to do the best she could to make up for her not wanting him.

Felt "Punishment"

In spite of her love for Danny, and her watchfulness, he was always in some trouble. He had so many accidents, falls and things. One very bad one when he stumbled into a boiler of hot water and was terribly scalded. Mother took it tragically and seemed sadder than ever after that. She used to say it seemed "like a punishment."

Young as I was, I used to try to figure out why mother had so little happiness, and just what was the matter, and I used to pray for her at night and ask God to "please make mother happy and give her some joy in life."

(In tomorrow's absorbing chapter of "MY STORY," Charlotte Mills gives a vivid picture of her mother and describes Mrs. Mills's longings, her groping for better things. She relates the advice her mother gave her about marriage—advice distilled from the boiling turmoil of her own depressing life. Miss Mills also tells how the Rev. Hall used to leave his fine mansion to come to eat little cookies her mother had prepared for him in her own drab home.)
